Pleads For U.S. To Admit DP Immigrants

A plea that displaced persons be admitted to the United States under liberalized immigration restrictions was made in New York by Earl G. Harrison, United States representative on the Inter-Governmental Committee of Refugees.

Mr. Harrison, a former Commissioner of Immigration, asserted that less than 20 per cent of the immigration quotas of the last decade had been filled because quotas of countries like Great Britain and Ireland, citizens of which are not refugees, were not used up.

"No valid reason can be given why a portion at least of this population loss should not now be made up permitting victims of war and of persecution, political and religious, to come here," he declared.

The simplest step, he continued, would be to transfer substantial quantities of the quotas of countries not using them to "areas of real need." This would make it possible to admit 100,000 displaced persons annually for a limited number of years, he said.

Mr. Harrison spoke at the fall meeting of the National Social Welfare Assembly. In presenting his proposal, Mr. Harrison said it did not mean "throwing up the gates of admission" but remembering the population losses of the past.

"We should admit no less than 300,000 and double that number would be answer our present obligation," he continued. "It would still be half the number that might have been admitted."

Challenging the "widespread misconception" that displaced persons were largely Jewish, Mr. Harrison declared that Jews among them were "distinctly a minority."

"It does not make sense that the United States and other occupying countries should expend large sums of money and use extensive personnel to maintain displaced persons in camps in idleness," he continued, "when many of them either could be self-supporting or have relatives and friends who would gladly assume the responsibility.

"The paramount need of the last million of Europe's displaced persons is for a country of permanent residence. All other assistance, however necessary, does not offer a real solution to this basic need.

U.N. Told Arabs Reject Forcible Refugee Plan

Without specific mention of Palestine, the Arab States warned the U. N. General Assembly that they would never approve a resettlement program which compelled them to receive refugees in opposition to their own wishes.

The United Nations was told by the chairman of the Egyptian delegation, Mohamed Hussein Heykal Pasha, that in no case could the "freely-expressed wishes" of any nation be denied through forcible immigration. He implied that if this reservation were not accepted the international program of refugee resettlement would fail.

Mr. Heykal, president of the Egyptian Senate, thus brought before the assembly an issue—the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. An official observer for the Central Conference of America Rabbis, Dr. Louis I. Newman, interpreted his words as "undeniably having a bearing on the immigration of refugees into Palestine."

Prince Amir Faisal al Saud, foreign minister of Saudi Arabia and chairman of its delegation, skirted the refugee question in his initial address but he later relayed word through a spokesman of his approval of Egyptian views. Asked if he intended to take any action on the Palestine problem, the Prince said that would depend "on future developments."

Mr. Heykal assured the latest delegates that Egypt was convinced the United Nations should co-operate to permit the prompt resettlement of the victims of war and of ... the influence ... practical and the freely expressed wishes of the populations of such-and-such a region.

"We must not forget that the success of the great enterprise depends above all on the nature of the welcome that will be reserved to the refugees in the country of their new residents. This factor is of the greatest importance because it will have very great influence on the life of these refugees in their country of adoption."

Questioned later in the delegates' lounge, Mr. Heykal said his remarks were not intended to point up Palestine in particular. He implied that the London conference in which Arab and Jewish leaders are participants was the proper place for the issue to be discussed at present. He admitted, however, that his government would oppose any attempt by the United States or Great Britain to force Jewish immigration without consent of the Arab states.

Rabbi Newman, obviously perturbed by the remarks of Mr. Heykal, went to the delegates lounge afterward, seeking members of the Egyptian delegation to determine why they had intervened in the refugee problem. Mr. Heykal at the time was attending a closed session of delegates from the Arab States but one of his subordinates conversed for several minutes with Rabbi Newman. He was informed that Egypt was interested, although not directly concerned, in the dispute because of her participation in the Arab League.

No Jews Agree To Return To Poland

The U.S. State Department estimated that there now were about 700,000 persons in United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration displaced persons camps in Germany, with displaced persons not in the camps bringing the total number of displaced persons of United Nations origin in Germany up to about 1,000,000.

Of these, about 142,000 are Jews, practically all of whom are in the United States zone, the State Department said. About 71,000 displaced persons are in camps in Austria, of whom about 32,000 are Jews, the Department added.

An official of the State Department reported that the effort to induce Polish displaced persons to return to their home ... an

Ibn Saud Says Call To Open Gates Broke Word

King Ibn Saud, of Saudi Arabia, charged in a letter to President Truman that the President had violated "previous promises" by calling for immediate and substantial Jewish immigration into Palestine.

The letter, made public in London by the Saudi Arabian legation, accused Jews of "brutalities" and said President Truman could improve Arabian-American relations by "stopping this Zionist aggression" in the Middle East.

Ibn Saud declared that Mr. Truman's plea for substantial Palestine immigration was "in complete contradiction" to a White House statement last August saying the United States would not make specific suggestions for a Palestine solution.

The monarch, leader of millions of Arab Wahabite tribesmen and the powerful Moslem Brotherhood, said he had always tried to keep the late President Roosevelt as well as Mr. Truman "informed of the true position in Palestine."

"I never ceased to point out that the Jews were aggressors from the start," he said. "They pleaded at first humanitarian reasons for their hostile acts in which they persevered with utmost brutality, as is well known to you, Mr. President, and to the whole American people.

"Their ambitions which knew no bounds have now been extended beyond the Palestine boundaries, threatening neighboring Arab countries, even to within the confines of our holy lands."

"And it is because of this earnest desire on my part to preserve these bonds between the United States on one part and my country and the rest of the Arab countries on another, that I have always endeavored to keep the late President Roosevelt and you, Mr. President, well informed of the true position in Palestine, and of the natural rights owned by the Arab people in this country for more than 1,000 years.

"I never ceased to point out that the Jews were aggressors from the start. They pleaded at first humanitarian reasons for

Warns Of Long Political Struggle Unless Palestine Solution Is Reached

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, member of the Executive of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, said that "a viable Jewish state" to include roughly from 50 to 65 per cent of Palestine is the least that world Jewry can accept.

The only alternative he saw to this solution, to be achieved by a partition of Palestine, was extreme violence against the British Government within a few weeks. In the event of complete failure to work out a "settlement acceptable to the Jews, he said at a press conference, they may by next year's United Nations Assembly join the Arabs in a united front appeal to the United Nations to end the British mandate in Palestine.

Dr. Goldmann, "who returned to Washington from London, said the Palestine state should definitely include the Negab, the southern desert section of Palestine comprising roughly one-third of the land, which the Jews would reclaim through irrigation, and for which the Arabs have no plan. He said it should also include Galilee, the northern hills section, and the coastal plains that now have a Jewish majority population. To the Arabs should go the central plateau, which is purely Arab, he said."

He emphasized that this was not a hard and fast demand, but to be used as "basis for discussion." He said that while the Jewish Agency would prefer a country with boundaries, it would also consider areas connected by corridors.

The new Jewish State, he declared, must immediately have "full freedom of Jewish immigration directed by the Agency" so that 1,000,000 Jews could speedily be settled there, thus solving the European Jewish problem, and also providing a home for persecuted Jews in North Africa, [illegible] States.

Start Fund For New Medical School

The 1946-47 campaign for a medical school, costing $4,000,000, to be erected in Palestine, was started at a dinner at the Harmonie Club, New York City, one hundred Jewish leaders attending and pledging themselves to raise $2,000,000 in New York.

Federal Judge Simon H. Rifkind of the Southern New York District, who recently visited Palestine as civilian adviser on Jewish affairs to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, declared that a medical school in Palestine was "a complete part of a program of social welfare that is necessary for the upbuilding of Palestine."

Frederick F. Greenman, chairman of the New York campaign, said the campaign to create the new medical school offered an opportunity to all Jews, both Zionists and non-Zionists, to take part in a constructive project that would be [illegible] general health situation in Palestine.

Hatred Not Increasing, Says U.S. Analyst

The Ku Klux Klan is "almost washed up in the United States," Benjamin R. Epstein, director of the eastern regional office of the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith, told nearly 1,000 representatives of Jewish women's organizations at the opening fall fund-raising meeting of the Women's Division of the Joint Defense Appeal for $5,000,000 in the Temple Emanu-El community house, 1 East Sixty-fifth Street, New York. He said that the "Klan has become fully discredited." The drive is in behalf of the League and the American Jewish Committee.

Elmo Roper, public opinion analyst, cited polls for 1938 and 1946 as indicating that, "while anti-Semitism has not increased in this country, it is now more outspoken." He found it running parallel "with hostilities to Russia and Great Britain and with disapproval of labor unions and large-scale Government work projects to help prevent unemployment."

Referring to the work of the two organizations in helping to combat attacks upon minority groups, Mr. Epstein said that Americans of all races and creeds had combined into "a machine of public opinion pointing the finger of scorn" at the Klan and "exposing it for what it was worth".

He emphasized the necessity of "maintaining these groups not as outposts on the Klan," and as watchdog groups with post-[illegible] functions. "The road down the

Fought Private War To Save Orphans

Mlle. Simone Weil, 26-year-old French woman who fought a private war of deception against German and Vichy operatives to shepherd hundreds of orphaned and homeless children in France, has arrived in the U.S. to study for a year in Tulane University's School of Social Work on a scholarship awarded by the National Council of Jewish Women.

Her academic training will follow experience in a social service "school of hard knocks" in which she forged documents wholesale and channeled persecuted Jewish children through a clandestine network to safety with friendly French Gentile families, schools and convents. She was a key worker in the Oeuvre de Secours aux Enfants, a children's relief organization that went underground during the German occupation and the Vichy regime. Her story came out in an interview with the New York Times, and in records of the council's correspondence with associated agencies in Europe.

Once in Limoges in southern France, while traveling under an alias, Mlle. Weil was arrested by the Gestapo. She was carrying an incriminating official stamp, stolen to forge papers, but managed to conceal it during a search by the simple device of hoping it in her hands. Her own falsified documents passed her captors' scrutiny, and she was released.

In addition to caring for the children, whose parents in most cases has been sent to concentration camps, she organized convoys for them through the occupied zone, transported funds and papers and maintained files and records on her charges. In cooperation with the Christian Friendship, another underground group, she helped to manage the escape of 300 French youth scheduled for shipment to German work camps.

After the liberation, Mlle. Weil reopened the OSE's first post-war home for children near Limoges. Then she went to Paris and established another home that is still serving both as a refuge for children aged 3 to 6 years and a school for training kindergarten teachers.

Mlle. Weil's scholarship is the second awarded this year by the council. Additional ones will go to women from France, Tunisia, Poland, Belgium and Greece, who will study in different American institutions, including the New York School of Social Work, Columbia University, Wayne University and the University of Minnesota. Like Mlle. Weil, the future recipients will return to their own countries after their studies to undertake greater rehabilitation work.

CHILD OWES LIFE TO QUICK THINKING OF 8-YEAR-OLD GIRL!
MONIQUE BONNIER WINS Dow Award

The children playing on the third floor balcony on Montreal's St. Zotique Street, were trying to see a new swing on the balcony below. 5-year-old Rene Dumont had climbed a chair to peer down. He thought he was safe because of the high netting, but suddenly it gave way . . . and the boy went through, falling headlong towards the ground! Then an amazing thing happened. There was a clothes-line off the second floor . . . and little Dumont somehow managed to grab it. His fall was broken and he hung on for dear life. Upstairs, 8-year-old Monique Bonnier sprang to action. Shouting to the younger to hold tight, she raced to the clothes line and began to pull him in. Soon she was joined by her brother and in a few seconds they had the frightened lad safe and sound.

To young Monique Bonnier of Montreal, for her coolness and presence of mind, we are proud to present The Dow Award.

Getting To Shore Undetected

The following account, written by an illegal immigrant in Palestine, is from The New Statesman And Nation:

We do not call ourselves illegal. Our own people, the Jews of Palestine, call us uncertificated immigrants. I can't tell everything about my journey to the homeland because I came on one of the boats that succeeded in getting to shore undetected. Several have been caught, but ours succeeded in getting through the patrols and slipping away even after we were spotted by airplanes. Like the Enzo Sereni, one of the boats that was caught, our boat, too, was named after one of the Palestinians who parachuted into Europe on an Allied mission during the war, and was captured and executed.

As for myself, I am twenty-one and I come originally from White Russia. When the Germans took the area, everyone in my family disappeared, as we say, because we don't like to say they are dead. Everyone except myself and one sister. We joined the partisans. I have a medal that I received from the Soviet Union.

After the war I went back to my town and found there were no Jews left alive, and I couldn't live there any more. So I made my way into Poland, and there in one of the larger cities I got in touch with some surviving Jews who were going to try to come to Palestine. Several of us started out together. My sister is waiting, to try later.

We started on a train, and when we came to a border we said we were Greek refugees returning to our homeland, for if we had admitted we were Jews they wouldn't have let us go on. One of us could speak a little Greek, and the rest of us kept quiet. So we got through.

We travelled through several countries. We had a little money at the beginning of our journey, and after that we were "Displaced Persons." In the large centres we asked our way about, and were able to get in touch with other people trying to come to Palestine by whatever means possible. I can't tell the details, but we managed to get to the place where there was a boat.

Two hundred and fifty of us crowded into the hold of a tiny ship. When I saw that ship, I felt right away that I would never get off it alive. I know a little about ships, and it was such a tiny, weak old tub I was sure it could never cross the Mediterranean. The hammocks in the hold were so close together that when a man lay in his hammock he pressed on the man below. We had to stay in our hammocks all the time, as there was no room to move at all. But as there were no sanitary arrangements below deck we had to take turns going on deck. We also went on deck in groups of ten for meals. We had to keep to this small number for fear of our ship being suspected if it were sighted and many people were observed on deck. We had tinned food, but very little water. Our ration was one-eighth of a litre a day. Since we had so little water, most of us ate very little. Some didn't eat at all during the entire trip, which lasted twelve days. At first, everyone was seasick.

Even those who had been in the army or had been sailors were sick. The ship was very badly balanced; it rolled so heavily that when ten people were on deck, to eat, they had to be distributed five on each side, for fear of overturning the vessel. There wasn't even a barometer on board, and there was only one tiny lifeboat. There weren't enough sailors, and I was called to take my turn at the wheel, since I knew a little about navigation. I stood a four-hour watch every day.

The worst time was the tenth day. None of us believed we would get through that storm. The captain was sure we were finished, and so he got out some wine and got drunk, waiting for the ship to break in two and dump us all into the sea. Each time a wave engulfed us it seemed our prow would never come up, and the ship would simply break. We tried to prevent this by lashing oil-barrels around the cabin, so as to make a central mass. To move those barrels, while the ship was pitching and rolling, was a superhuman job, as we had to cling to any kind of support, with one hand, to avoid being washed overboard, while we dragged the barrels, inch by inch, across the deck. But we managed to get this done, and perhaps it saved us.

During this storm we were spotted by scoutplanes, and two of them circled above us all day long. Even though we thought we were going to drown, we kept up our precautions against being identified as an illegal ship. We ducked, or flattened to keep out of sight, whenever the planes came near.

The next night we reached the Palestine coast. We had lost contact with any possible reception party. We decided we had better try to make shore and land ourselves. In the meantime the ship struck a sandbar. We put off our one lifeboat and tried to get some of the women ashore, as several of them were very weak. But the sea was still rough, and the lifeboat capsized. Many of us jumped into the water to save the girls. But one of the girls drowned that night, as we finally reached Palestine.

People had been on the look-out for us, and even though we were in the wrong place, they found us, and came out to help us land. But they had no lifeboats at this place so they swam out and helped many of us off the ship. Then some ropes were stretched from the ship to the shore, which was not too far away, and those of us who couldn't swim managed to pull themselves along the ropes through the deep water.

Once we got ashore we were quickly distributed over the country. So we are home.

British Remove Palestine General

The British War Office announced that Lieut. Gen. Sir Evelyn Barker would relinquish his post as commander of British forces in Palestine, soon to head the Army's Eastern Command in England.

General Barker was widely criticized in Britain on the ground that he wrote an anti-Semitic letter to divisional and district commanders after the bombings of the King David Hotel in Jerusalem several months ago.

Subsequently, Deputy Prime Minister Herbert Morrison dissociated the Government from the letter and said that Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, would deal with the matter.

General Barker, 52, will be succeeded in Palestine by Maj. Gen. G. H. A. MacMillan, now serving in the War Office. At present the English Eastern Command is headed by Lieut. Gen. Sir Oliver Leese, who is retiring.

Regardless of what was intended by the War Office, the change in the Palestine Command will probably be welcomed in Jewish circles. General Barker, Jewish sources said, was unpopular with even the moderate Jewish elements as a result of comb-outs, curfews and other measures intended to repress terrorism in the Holy Land.

General Barker's transfer possibly was linked with conversations between the Jewish Agency and the British Government, and if so it might represent a British concession to get the Jews into round-table talks on Palestine's future.

Says Butchers Balk At Kashruth Code

Intimating that Kosher butchers of Cleveland, Ohio, fear supervision because their products are not strictly kosher, Rabbi Z. Shapiro, president of the Jewish Community Council, asked all city rabbis to discuss the situation with their congregations, reports the Jewish Post.

Mr. Shapiro charged in a letter to all city Conservative and Orthodox Rabbis, that the butchers refused to sign a Code of Regulations they had helped draw up. Giving the background of the present difficulty, Mr. Shapiro described how a committee of the butchers, the shochtim, the rabbis and the community drew up the Code of Regulations, and then received a $7,000 allocation from the Jewish Welfare Fund to underwrite the costs of the supervision.

Mr. Shapiro's letter said in part:

"Meanwhile a Code of Regulations to govern Kashruth supervision was being carefully drawn up during the course of many meetings. Throughout, the representatives of the butchers expressed their point of view and every attempt was made to adjust the regulations in accordance with their thinking.

"Finally, after months of work and constant consultation with all groups involved, a Code of Regulations was completed. It was agreed that all butchers now in business would be certified as conducting Kosher shops upon signing a statement that they agreed to abide by the regulations of the Kashruth Board . . . The Rabbinical Council and the Jewish Community Council both approved the plan and for the first time it seemed certain that an orderly system of Kashruth supervision would be established in Cleveland.

"However, at this eleventh hour the butchers with but few exception refused to sign the application for certifying their shops as Kosher. Continued efforts have been made by the Council to determine the basis for the sudden refusal to fulfill the terms of the agreement. The butchers were given complete assurance that in no case could anyone conducting a Kosher shop be harmed by the regulations. It, therefore, seems clear that a refusal to sign can only mean a fear that the proposed supervision will really be effective.

"The butchers are now attempting to defeat the plan they themselves have helped to draw up. They have made it impossible at this time to guarantee that meat sold in Jewish shops is unquestionably Kosher. More important, they are openly defying the attempts of the organized community to bring order into a field of intense Jewish concern."

American military police and Counter-Intelligence Corps agents raided the Haskomer Hatzair Munich offices in an attempt to apprehend persons who posted anti-British signs on military headquarters.

'Travel Document' To Help Refugees

The world's displaced persons, dislodged by World War II, will be eligible January 15 for a "travel document," carrying many advantages of a passport, the Intergovernmental Committee for Refugees announced.

Although resembling the Nansen passport issued after World War I, the new documents will be more of a passport "and less of a piece of paper," the committee said.

Approved by the committee, the agreement has been signed by fifteen nations. The committee is confident that the United States will act favorably. They added that the United States was represented at the conference that preceded the agreement and that its representatives approved the document and had taken it to Washington for study by the State Department.

An important feature of the agreement is that the "travel document" will give its owner the right to return to the country in which it was issued at any time during its validity. Few countries accept immigrants without the assurance that they can be returned to their country of origin, so the clause is expected to facilitate refugees who desire to emigrate but do not leave their present refuge for fear of being turned back by another country and then being unable to return to their present haven.

Plans Of Home Show New Trend

Plans for building a 250-bed hospital for sick and bedridden aged persons were announced by the Home and Hospital of the Daughters of Jacob, 167th Street and Findlay Avenue, the Bronx, largest Orthodox Jewish home for the aged in New York.

The announcement was made at a dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria marking the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the institution. Max Weinstein, president of Russeks Fifth Avenue, Inc., and for forty-five years chairman of the home's executive committee, was guest of honor.

Mr. Weinstein, who will head the [illegible]

He added that the proportion of aged in the city's population is "rising at a rapid rate."

Besides providing more adequate medical care at the home, he continued, the erection of a hospital would permit enlargement of accommodations of the existing building and general modernization.

Two of the five stories of the present building are now used as an infirmary. Under the new plan these floors would be converted to residence facilities and the entire building would be remodeled to give more privacy to each patient, with a higher proportion of private rooms for single persons and couples.

There would also be enlarged recreational and occupational therapy facilities, portable libraries for bedridden patients, a new library for ambulatory patients and additional lounges.

The home realizes, he explained, that the aged must have companionship and other help "besides mere bed and board," and its aim "will continue to be a full-rounded program for the aged."

The hospital will make use of the newest techniques in caring for the aged, he said, and will offer expanded facilities for the study of diseases and illness common to aged persons.

Traces Of Ancient Citv Found

French archeologists have announced a discovery of traces of a city dating back possibly 5,000 years in north-central Palestine.

The site of the city, found twenty feet below the desert after three months of probing by the French Biblical and Archeological School, under the direction of Father De Vaux, is so situated that discoverers said it might be the old Israelite capital of Tirza. However, Father De Vaux, cautioned against "prematurely placing importance on the discovery."

Relics taken from the excavations, which will be extended next year, include two dozen baskets of broken pottery, nearly 100 pieces

SIMPSON Guided Canada's Pioneers
When Roberts Lord stretched from Ontario to the Pacific and north to the Arctic, one man controlled its destiny. As Governor-in-Chief, Sir George Simpson guided Canada's pioneer fur traders for nearly half a century. In uniting the Hudson's Bay and North West companies in 1821, Simpson did much to found Canada's prosperity at a time when fur was Canada's wealth.

CALVERT Guided New World Destiny
FAR BACK in the 17th century Calvert said to his New World pioneers: "Promote industry and public benefit."
Famous English statesman and Secretary of State to King James I, Calvert founded historic colonies in Newfoundland and Maryland in the early 1600's. "Preserve the laws . . . for unity," Calvert counselled his settlers.
Calvert's ideals of unity have been shared by all men of vision since Calvert's time 300 years ago. Let each of us be a man of vision now . . . help guide Canada's destiny.
The full measure of our stature as a nation depends upon unity of purpose. There is only one Canada for clear-headed Canadians.

three cups all-purpose flour
one scant cup raisins
cinnamon
sugar
jam or nuts

Dissolve yeast cake in cup of sour cream, and blend well. Add the three tablespoons of sugar and melted butter. Stir until well blended. Add the well-beaten eggs, then the flour. Beat this into an even batter. Add the raisins. Place in refrigerator over night. Next morning put in a warm place for two hours. Bake in a warm oven, 300 degrees, for twenty minutes.

NEW METHOD ROAST CHICKEN

Scald a medium-sized capon; rub it with grated onion; sprinkle paprika and poultry spice on it, to taste. For stuffing, soak dry bread in water, squeeze out water, and mix the soft bread with about two tablespoons grated onion, salt and pepper to taste, one egg, and one tablespoon chicken fat. Stuff chicken and put it into a brown paper bag. Tie up the bag, and place it on an ungreased baking pan or roasting pan, and bake the chicken in the bag in a 350-degree oven for about two hours. When done, take out of bag, and chicken will be brown and crisp. It does not require basting while baking.

Slurs Jews To Detained Reporters

Ten local and foreign correspondents were detained ninety minutes in Jerusalem in the office of Lieutenant Colonel Richard H. L. Webb, British commander of the 1st Battalion of the Argyll and Sutherlands Highlanders.

Webb took the men to his office after interceding to save them from arrest when British troops, on duty with Palestine police during the screening of residents near the scene of bombing attacks, protested that the newsmen were "interfering with the progress of the screening."

The protest, it was learned, was based on the attempt of some correspondents to speak to the Jews before they were screened, in violation of military orders.

Ted Lurie, correspondent of the Columbia Broadcasting System, said in a broadcast from Jerusalem that Webb gave the detained correspondents "a good deal of profanity about the Jews, which is unrepeatable, and called them a 'despicable race.'"

Webb, Lurie said, explained that British troops occasionally did a bit of "looting" in the Jewish quarter, and had to use the butts of their rifles. He told the reporters that they were taken away from the scene because they had a rather embarrassing effect on the soldiers.

Lurie continued: "Colonel Webb said that after an outrage they (the British troops) have to do something, so they empty the houses. Secondly, they had to make as much of a nuisance of themselves as possible so that the people would turn against the terrorists.

"When we suggested that this kind of treatment might be having the opposite effect of turning the people against the British, he retorted: 'I wonder what you ruddy Americans would do. Anyway, Britain would give up the mandate if it weren't for Russia. That's the key to the whole business.'"

A broadcast over the "Voice of Israel", underground transmitter, strongly denied rumors that Haganah, Jewish resistance movement, would take up arms against groups engaging in political violence or collaborate with the authorities in action against such "activists" policy.

The broadcast said that so long as British policy "to liquidate Zionism" continued and the doors of Palestine remain closed to immigrants while arrests and searches go on there, the "Jewish resistance movement will pursue its struggle," the broadcast added.

The broadcaster added that the Haganah movement was deeply entrenched and widespread in Palestine and abroad.

The broadcast also declared that although Haganah condemned political adventurism and terrorist methods by groups without public responsibility, it would not [illegible]

"If the United States were to take the lead, other countries would unquestionably take similar action on some scale and the camps could be broken up or greatly reduced in number. This would result not only in tremendous financial savings, but would salvage much more in the way of human resources, which, as matters stand now, are rapidly deteriorating."

Mr. Harrison appealed to members of the social service agencies present to "arouse your countries to lift their voices in support of President Truman's plea that they be admitted."

Pathfinders Of Jewish National Redemption

In a way this man became the symbol of the creative will of the Jewish people. Herzl was indeed a statesman possessed of prophetic genius. His was an artistic spirit and with his power of persuasion was able to lift the masses of Jewry to great heights of national aspiration. When he came upon the Jewish scene he found Jews disunited, fearful, hopeless. He spoke. He gave a message of deliverance to his people. Like unto a Maimonides he created an epoch in Jewish history. And in a way Herzl may be classed as the greatest Jew of the 19th century.

The third pathfinder of our national revival is Eliezer ben Jehuda. This Lithuanian was originally destined for the Rabbinate but soon turned to a study of the current problems of the day. He was caught up as a young man in the Pan-Slavic movement of the day and from this moment there came to him the logical conclusion that Israel too needs a rebirth upon home soil. Later ben Jehuda read George Eliot's "Daniel Deronda", which stimulated his resolve to settle in Palestine.

Eliezer ben Jehuda was convinced that Hebrew must undergo a rebirth. That language must become the daily vernacular for Jews in Palestine. He began to speak Hebrew to his friends and coined new words as need arose. He pleaded for the revival of the Hebrew language through the existing Hebrew press.

Tuberculosis forced Eliezer ben Jehuda to withdraw from his medical studies and he therefore attended the Paris teachers' seminary of the Alliance Israelite. In 1882 ben Jehuda left for Palestine with his young wife. While on board the ship he insisted that Hebrew be the only language spoken between them. And so in the ben Jehuda home began that miraculous experiment which resulted in the miracle of Hebrew reborn in Palestine life today. Eliezer ben Jehuda, because of his fanaticism, proved that Hebrew could become the language of life. Eliezer ben Jehuda had to struggle to uphold his ideas. And it was in every way a severe struggle with disease, poverty, a corrupt Levantinism environment. But his spirit could not be broken. His was the courage of the spiritual pioneer overcoming opposition.

Soon Eliezer ben Jehuda set himself to work on a Hebrew dictionary. His wife was great in his loyalty to his ideals, in his devotion to Hebrew. He erred in his attempt to over-emphasize the cultural aspect of Hebrew letters and in the minimizing of the religious values of the Jewish Renaissance. But, in a word, if Hebrew today is the living tongue of Jews everywhere and it is, we are indebted to none other so much as to Eliezer ben Jehuda.

I chose to speak of Aaron David Gordon as the fourth pathfinder. He is best known to us as the apostle of "The Religion of Labor." At a time when the ghetto philosophy made Jews despise "Avodah Shechorah", Gordon called upon Jews to find joy in Avodah Shechorah. Jews, he pleaded, are fit for all sorts of labor. And Palestine restoration could only come, believed Gordon, through every manner of work that life required performed by Jewish hands. Not only the cleanest, the most intellectual but the crudest and hardest must be done by Jews themselves. Labor, teaches Gordon, becomes the truest expression of the human being. Labor gives one the zest of creation.

This man Gordon, at the threshold of the fifties, left his Russian home and went to Palestine. Here in poverty he lived and worked. At the same time he found time to write essays and instruct his labor comrades.

Not so long ago I was privileged to visit Degania, that flourishing Jewish cooperative colony. Everywhere I felt the spirit of a Gordon hovering as a living benediction. Gordon was one of the founders of this colony which has won the admiration of students of social sciences.

It was Gordon who advocated that the historic claim to Palestine on the part of the Jewish people was not enough. This claim, he taught, must be renewed through a creative union with its soil. The redemption of the soil will bring creativeness and destroy the parasitism with which the Jew has been charged in the Diaspora.

I have travelled through the Jewish cooperative colonies in Palestine. I have seen Chalutzim wrestling with the stubborn neglected soil of Eretz Israel. I have watched them clear the malaria-infested swamps. I have found them doing the hardest of work, accompanied by laughter and song. It was Gordon who pointed the way for a productive Jewish life in Palestine. The Histadrut in all its ramifications, the experiments in social strivings, owes much to A. D. Gordon and his teachings. There is no quivering that productive labor in Palestine may yet become the model where a first just social order will be established and this order would indeed be a challenge to all mankind. A. D. Gordon died in 1922. His memory is revered by all who knew him. His name is destined to live in the annals of the Palestine Renaissance.

And the last of the pathfinders that I wish to speak about belongs among the philosophers. He was indeed a clear-sighted man possessed of a fine critical mind. Ahad Ha-Am attempted in a philosophic manner to think through the problems of the Jewish Renaissance. He came to the conclusion that Jewish national unity can best be had through Palestine becoming "a spiritual center." Palestine as a spiritual center would influence Jewish life everywhere. Ahad Ha-Am would have in Palestine a shining Jewish community developed by Jewish genius and labor in which community-worship would find place.

The philosopher and thinker Ahad Ha-Am is a practical man called Ussishkin and united him in the organization for Jewish immigration and other important political undertakings. In 1927 Ahad Ha-Am died. The mortal remains of this man rest in the cemetery of the old-Jewish city of Tel-Aviv. Throughout the Jewish world his departure was felt as a national loss. He will ever be remembered as the great logician and profound thinker of the Palestine Renaissance.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anthem."

Last week there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune another one of those large and costly advertisements on the Palestine problem, placed this time by the American League For a Free Palestine, Inc., over the name of Guy M. Gillette, president, and others such as Louis Bromfield, Ben Hecht, Will Rogers, Jr., and Colonel James Roosevelt, to mention a few who would be the best-known here in Canada. This advertisement was a message to the American Delegation at the United Nations Assembly asking them to support "the just demand of the Hebrew Committee of National Liberation" which they back "because we have found no other body which can speak for the Hebrews of Europe and Palestine without dual loyalties or interests other than those of their embattled peoples."

Right by the side of this advertisement is an Associated Press despatch about a Stern gang manifesto which threatened a "drastic intensification of the mine war against the British"; more and more mines placed in the path of military vehicles; and shooting for all British officers carrying guns.

"The Hebrews have no representation in your Assembly," says the advertisement. "When we say Hebrews are not represented, we do not refer to those Americans, Englishmen, Frenchmen, etc., who are Jews and who participate in the normal life of their country. We refer to those with no allegiance to any but the Hebrew Nation, to those in Europe who are displaced and stateless, exiled from Palestine by force.....Today there exists a conflict between this Hebrew Nation and the British Empire. The Hebrews are, at long last, returning to Palestine. A foreign navy prevents them from going home; thousands, upon reaching home, are kidnapped and transported to concentration camps. This letter is not to serve as an indictment of Great Britain."

In another section of the advertisement there is a note saying that: "This message to the American Delegation at the United Nations inaugurates the efforts of the American League to place the question of Palestine on the agenda of the United Nations.... The impact and effectiveness of this campaign depends upon you. The only way you will get action is by overwhelming clamor of the American people for action, action today on this issue."

Now, the public has had and will doubtless continue to have, if the money holds out, quite a dose of advertisements having to do with Jewish issues and the one described above is comparatively mild. Some have been much more headlong and sensational in their tone and language and some have been cheap and silly. Every time this column reads one of these advertisements it feels the heat of forest fire coming closer and wishes that the groups who buy newspaper space for these adventurous exercises in expediency would cease to pursue their right to do it. However, at the moment it is interested in conjecturing on what the full and ultimate effect may be on the general public. People must be getting at the least kind of sick and tired of being enlightened through these too vehement and frequent appeals to [illegible] are locked up with their murderers in Europe. Other thousands are now being held in concentration camps as if they were our enemies instead of our first and most generous ally. They are brutally punished when they set foot on their native soil. Their books are being burned in Palestine.... Hebrews have a right to be heard as well as Englishmen." This appeal on behalf of a resistance group seems to be made on the assumption that there exists in the United States a group of Americans which is anti-British and which can therefore lead public opinion to the side of support of a Jewish state as a protest against British policy in Palestine.

But armed rebellion is going on in Palestine and it is highly doubtful that American public opinion can be won for the Jews and against the British during a time of terrorism and recurring violence, whether or not there is provocation for it. The impatience of public opinion over mounting unrest, threats of reprisals, and destructive action in Palestine is apt likely to spill over in bad-will toward all the Jews everywhere than it is to bring discredit to the British even in the face of their present Palestine policy which many Americans condemn.

There have been too many violent denunciations of Britain and too little disposition on the part of the Jews to refrain from hysterical resentment in speeches, statements, or paid advertisements, to give any impression except one of group instability. This column is not arguing the degree to which they have a right to feel mistreated over British policy in Palestine. It is only questioning their judgment in being so vocal publicly and so ready to be angry and hysterical, in the light of whether such action inspires or diminishes the good-will of their countrymen toward them.

Reckless conduct may be fully understandable and still do untold harm. It is easy enough to buy space in which to smear or embarrass Britain at high pitch, without counting all the costs that amount to more than money. For Jews to continuously bombard the public with accusations against British administration of Palestine affairs, however well-founded the charges may be, is to show a lack of understanding by Jews of other people's psychology. At a certain point the tide turns and what may have been sympathy or at least attentiveness changes to impatience, antagonism and maybe even combativeness and a determined opposition mingled with disgust. The Jewish position even in the United States is not so secure that Jews can afford to squander good-will and it is only the fanatical and the irresponsible who throw wisdom to the winds and play fast and loose with friendly feeling in the lands where they are the outstanding beneficiaries of it.

result in a "last minute" change in British policy that would make possible the adoption of this plan at the next session of the London Palestine Conference scheduled to start Dec. 16.

He said that Foreign Minister Bevin had received all details of the Jewish position in the formal conversations in London, where the Jewish Agency laid down the conditions under which it would take part in the formal Palestine conference.

Two basic conditions were stipulated, he said:

(1) Agreement on such a basis of discussion as might have some reasonable prospect of a fruitful result. The Jewish Agency made clear that it would not even discuss the (Herbert) Morrison plan formally, that it must have a "viable state" to save the hundreds of thousands of Jews in the camps of Europe.

(2) Freedom to choose their own spokesmen. It was explained that the British Government had continued to reject the agency's claim to the right to name its own spokesman.

Dr. Goldman contended that the "key to the solution" was in the hands of the British Government.

"We know that very important Arab leaders would be ready to consider a partition scheme if they knew that they had to accept a compromise," he said. "Naturally no Arab leader will express his willingness to accept a compromise so long as the Arabs feel that they can get 100 per cent of their demands from the British.

"The British Government has shown no firmness in pressing the Arabs to accept a reasonable compromise," he declared, and he warned that very soon under this situation "energy that has been directed for forty years into constructive channels will be directed into destructive channels.

"The Jews of Palestine, supported by world Jewry and by men of good-will in all countries, will of necessity embark on an all-out struggle against the British Government," he said. "It will be a fight for many years to come and the result will be a permanent embarrassment of Anglo-American relations."

This is believed to be to identify themselves with a Jewish state if it can be formed, as such statements to the UNRRA usually are made in the hope of being able to migrate.

It was explained that the estimate of 1[illegible],000 Jews ready to migrate to Palestine made by Dr. Nahum Goldmann, of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, included far more than the Jewish displaced persons in UNRRA camps. He himself said it would include about 700,000 European Jews, the rest to come from Arab countries in North Africa.

Officials of both the UNRRA and the State Department said the camps in the United States now were "getting very crowded" as a result of the "sporadic" influx of Jews from other zones and from various countries of Europe. However, conditions in these camps, run by the UNRRA with supplies furnished by the Army, were described as "fairly good" at present, despite a "terrible lack of housing facilities."

Dr. Ladd testified that the question of the number of applicants to be admitted in the various religious categories was discussed among faculty members, but never formally by the executive family, as a matter of policy. He said he did not recall writing the letter, but that he must have done so in reply to some specific question.

The name of the person to whom the letter was addressed and the name of the rejected applicant regarding whom it had been written had been removed from the letter as submitted to the committee. It said in part:

"Cornell Medical College admits a class of eighty each fall. It picks these eighty men from about twelve hundred applicants of whom seven hundred or more are Jews. We limit the number of Jews admitted to such close to roughly the proportion of Jews in the population in this State, which is a higher proportion than in any other part of the country. This means we take in from 10-15 per cent Jews. The same qualifications hold in picking Jewish students as in picking students generally, that is, they [illegible] are a basis of scholarship, but on character, personality, leadership, etc.
